TEACHERS' COLLEGE.

Permission has been given by the faculty for the seniors to assume the academic cap and gown, and they will be denuded by the class of '98 as soon as they can be made. The form chosen is the slight modification of the Oxford gown adopted by most Students, but until alliance with Columbia justified their use the authorities withheld consent. The announcement that the Columbia Teachers' College, on June 2, was received with much satisfaction.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday reversed a judgment of the Special Term and ordered a new trial in the case of the New York Fire Department against George A. Stanton. The action was brought to enforce the payment of a special tax of 2 per cent of the premiums received by fire insurance companies not incorporated in this State, or by agents of such companies. The defendant asserted that the law was unconstitutional, and in Special Term the complaint was dismissed. The Appellate division unanimously held that the law was constitutional.
